We warned of this last week, but Sunday morning is D-Day. That is the time this great country of ours again goes on daylight saving time. When we set our clocks forward one hour before retiring Saturday night, it will mean we give up an hour of sleep. By the time we have forgotten that hour of lost sleep, the legislature gives it back next fall.

We must take a few moments to say some nice words about the Elba city government. There is truth in the belief that there is something good in everything, if we only look for it hard enough. Monday night the Elba city council meeting was a pleasure to attend. The meeting was informative both to city officials and to the public. There was a couple of times when council members could have taken a, "Damn the torpedoes, full speed ahead" attitude, but none did. While we would never advocate elected officials never disagree, it is nice to occasionally report on a meeting in which they are in apparent harmony.

The tragic tornado-caused collapse of the church in a rural area out from Piedmont would be hard for anyone to handle, especially since services were in progress and many worshipers died or were injured. At such a time the pastor must stand tall and brave for all those who suffered physical pain and/or lost friends or family. But, as in the case here, the minister lost her four-year daughter in the collapse. Now she must treat her own physical injuries, mourn the loss of her daughter and at the same time give aid and comfort to the surviving members of her church. This is to say nothing of the important and pressing need to take the leadership in reestablishing a place for the survivors to continue their worship. This woman has two advantages... her strong belief in God and the fact she can honestly tell her members, "I understand your pain and suffering."

The Livestock Judging Team recently competed in and won the County Contest. The members of the team are Bo Boyd, Charles Bozeman, Robyn Rhoades, Matthew Farris, Todd Hollinghead, and Jason Jordan. They judged cattle and pigs on the basis of body structure and overall appearance. They placed each class in order from best to last and gave oral reasons to the judges to support their class placings. Each person that actually competed performed extraordinarily well and we hope that on April 29 they will win the District Competition.
